The skin of the terrestrial Salamandra salamandra is populated by various types of immune cells such as monocytes and granulocytes. We report that the skin of this amphibian produces antimicrobial peptides (AMPs) that are active against a wide range of pathogens. Based on the information on the immune cells in the amphibian skin, a combination of methods was used to obtain a complete set of AMP sequences from the skin. Two previously uncharacterized cDNA encoding two novel alpha-defensins were cloned. A genomic clone encoding one of the new alpha-defensins was found to encompass six exons, which were in the same order as in the synthetic beta-defensin sequence. The expression of the two new alpha-defensins was shown to be up-regulated following fungal infection in vivo and in vitro. The second new alpha-defensin was expressed at the mRNA level in the skin of a frog, Xenopus laevis, and a fish, Tetraodon nigroviridis, as well as in the skin of the salamander S. salamandra.Foreign Affairs Minister Chrystia Freeland faced tough questions on day two of a parliamentary committee hearing in Ottawa. On Tuesday, Conservative MP Ted Falk grilled the international trade minister on the Canada-European Union trade deal, the state of the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), and the importation of diluting baby formula from China. She didn't back down from her initial, strongly-worded opposition to the CETA deal, in which Canada would have to make automatic concessions to protect the interests of large companies in Europe. "This is an important issue for our citizens," Freeland said. " 94e9d1d2d9
